

Abstract

The present invention relates to a method of controlling transmitting power level of a mobile station in CDMA communication system. This invention estimates a moving speed of a mobile station and changes power control step size according to the estimated moving speed, thereby tracking power level control command, which is transmitted from a base station to compensate the power variation of its received signals, quickly and precisely.